Charms And Murder (Pumpkin Valley Witches Book 1)

Synopsis

Melody Cook is addicted to magic. Just add it to her growing list of screwups. Melody has been demoted from her job at her family's charm shop. Now, instead of making charms, she's a salesperson—a task she's not up for. In order to get her life back, Melody decides to attend a magical addiction support group. It was a good idea until she discovers that the group isn't as invested in recovery as she is. And then a member is found dead. There's a killer loose in Pumpkin Valley and Melody is determined to solve the mystery. With the help of fashionable Gabrielle who desperately wants to prove her worth, the attractive and easy-going Corey who has a secret, and a mysterious cat, Melody will find who killed Chad. That is, if she can get her magic addiction under control |

Customer Reviews

While I enjoyed this book, I have pretty distinct ruts that define the books with which I fall in love. First the protagonist needs to be funny, self aware or at least working on it and genuinely aware of the glory of true magic. Second she needs to have a developed support system that we, too, love.

In this book, I felt just couldn't feel the characters, the scenario or the genuineness of the story. I'm glad I read it, but I am counting on the author to continue to write, to flesh out the characters and to remember that as a reader, I go into the world outlined in the book. The need for humor, fun, suspense, relatable feelings, security....cozy style, understandable connections, and that magic some authors have that are able to supply me with mini vacations that add wonder to my mundane life all are highly possible in this writer's future. She's begun the journey in this 1st of the series. I'm already awaiting.

Story is ok, writing seems hurried, disjointed. Needs better editing nothing major, but wrong and missing words, could be bad typist.

For me there was too much about the family business than about finding the murderer. Towards the end it was better.
