Cradle Of War (A Captain's Crucible Book 3)

Synopsis

The arrival of a strange alien ship changes everything for the stranded survivors of Battle Group 72.5. Captain Jonathan Dallas must place his trust in his newfound alien allies if his fleet is to survive the latest threat. He is faced with a terrible choice, one that could lead not only to the destruction of his battle group, but humanity itself. Regardless of his decision, the future remains uncertain, the intertwined fates of two galaxies hanging by a thread. In the shadows, a malevolent being works that thread like a spider, weaving a twisted web that could mean the end of everything. It is here where it all begins. Where history is made. Witness the cradle of war.

I havenâ™t been reading many of Isaac Hookeâ™s books, but now Iâ™m âœhookedâ• on them. This is the third book in the series (as you probably guessed from the title) and each one is just as good as the last. Captain Jonathan Dallas commands the USS Calloway and a small fleet that has gotten themselves stuck in a galaxy far, far away. They came through a slipstream gate believing it would take them closer to home. But, someone change the gate endpoint and the USS Calloway plus the fleet wound they know not where. This unknown system also has no return gate so it looks like they may be here quite some time. Initially, this small United Systems fleet was followed by a hostile band of Raakarr ships that do not need a gate to go from one system to the next. So, Captain Dallas finds himself faced with an enemy whom he must defeat and then find some way to get his ship and the others of his fleet home. Neither task is going to be easy. Fortunately, or maybe unfortunately, his fleet does contain one Raakarr vessel that has a supposedly rogue group of Raakarrs called the Zafe faction. They wish an alliance with the humans and do not agree with the attacks that have thus far taken place by the Elk faction of Raakarr. Captain Dallas doesn't yet trust these Raakarr, but he does recognize their ship now called the Talon as a possible way back home. Then a new alien vessel comes through the other slipstream wormhole. It's shaped like a Möbius strip and currently just sitting in front of the slipstream wormhole. Who are these guys and what do they want? Captain Dallas doesn't have unlimited resources and if he and his fleet are to return to human control space, he needs to get his gate builder ship working ASAP.
