Pamela Wilson's book, The Caregiving Trap, should be mandatory reading for any adult child starting their journey of taking care of their parent or loved one in their golden years. As a professional in the caregiving industry for over three years, I had the challenging task of being a sole resource for families unsure of what to expect. the Caregiving Trap does a phenomenal job in outlining what caring for a loved one will entail on your family, your personal life, as well as your physical and mental psyche. Understanding the individual's needs our paramount in order to address a proper course of action. Alzheimer's and other behaviorial modifications should be anticipated and Wilson does a good job in doing so for the reader through parables and other short stories to elaborate on her points. It is important to understand what it means to become a caregiver and any opportunity to minimize a shock to this experience is welcomed. On too many occuraences, families find themselves without answers when the time has come for a loved one to require regular assistance. By preparing oneself as much as possible, the transition can remain a special bond between child and parent as a loved one's needs change. There are numerous resources available for families when the time has come and I like how Wilson explores them in detail. Finally, the anticipation of death and witnessing the fragility of life is a profound experience. Through proper preparation and sufficient knowledge, this time can be a potential life changing event which is left with positivity and resolution. By helping others as a caregiver, we are able to help ourselves. The book's subtitle is "Solutions for Life's Unexpected Changes" and that is what this book offers; solutions.
